

PATIENT INFORMATION – PHOTOKERATITUS / ULTRAVIOLENT KERATITIS (also known as Arc Eye or Welder's Flash)

What is it?

This is a painful eye condition caused by exposure of the eye to ultraviolet (UV) rays from either natural sources such as sun reflecting from snow, or artificial sources such as sun tanning beds, a welder's arc, photographic flood lamps and halogen desk lamps.

Photokeratitis is like sunburn of the cornea and conjunctiva, and is not usually noticed until several hours after exposure. Symptoms include redness, swollen eyelids, headache, increased tears and a feeling of pain, likened to having sand in the eyes. These symptoms may not appear until 6-12 hours after the UBV exposure.

Treatment

- Keep the eye closed and rested
- You may have been given eye drops containing an ophthalmic antibiotic solution

When will my vision return?

Vision usually returns after 18 hours. The surface of the cornea usually heals with no long term complications within 24 to 48 hours.

To help ease any pain or discomfort you may be feeling, you can take simple painkillers such as Paracetamol*, which are available from your local chemist without a prescription. But, do not exceed the stated daily dosage.

Prevention

This type of injury can be prevented by wearing eye protection that blocks most of the ultraviolet radiation, such as welding goggles with the proper filters, a welder's helmet, sunglasses rated for sufficient UV protection, or appropriate snow goggles.
